Longview businessman seeks election to City Council

By Jimmy Isaac
Nov. 30, 2017 at 5:14 p.m.

Longview businessman Wray Wade announced his candidacy Thursday for City Council District 3 representative in a Feb. 3 special election.

Surrounded by childhood friends in their old neighborhood park, the entrepreneur and barber school owner said he is running again after losing to Councilwoman Kasha Williams in 2011.

Williams has announced her candidacy for Gregg County Pct. 4 commissioner and that she is resigning from the council, prompting the city to call a special election.

"I'm excited because I can't think of a better person for this job for the ability to go out and do what needs to be done," said Wade, who is board vice chairman of Longview Economic Development Corp.

So far, the District 3 race is a family affair. Retired businessman and church pastor Lonnie Murphy, who is Wade's brother-in-law, filed for the seat on Nov. 13.

Murphy declined to comment about Wade's announcement, but then said, "It is important that we have someone that is truly going to represent the community ... After all, it's the community whom you are supposed to represent, and that's who I intend to be. I intend to be the community's man downtown."

Wade said he believes both he and Murphy care about District 3, or Southeast Longview.

"My message is that District 3 is the gateway to Longview," Wade said, "and I think what District 3 does and the growth it makes will exemplify the growth of Longview, and I look forward to spearheading that growth."

Wade credited the support he received "from a lot of people" after his unsuccessful campaign in 2011 for inspiring him to seek elected office again.

Wade started the Barber Institute of Texas in South Longview in 2009, and was later appointed by Mayor Andy Mack to the LEDCO Board of Directors.

He said his service with LEDCO allowed him to work alongside other elected officials and civic leaders as they expanded Longview's trail system and attracted new or potential employers, such as Dollar General.

"A lot of times, I feel like those jobs and resources have missed District 3," Wade said, "and I think I have a great opportunity (with) my experiences as being a businessman in District 3, working on some pretty prominent boards to be able to bring those resources into this area."

Filing for the Feb. 3 special election ends at 5 p.m. Monday. Candidates may file during normal office hours at the city secretary's office at Longview City Hall, 300 W. Cotton St. For information about city candidate filing, visit longviewtexas.gov or call (903) 237-1080.

What's in those big ass bags NFL players are carrying into the locker rooms prior to games? Most everything needed (pads, shoes helmet etc.) is provided by the team...
